

Aude Pommeret, who holds a PhD from Paris I, is a professor of economics at Université Savoie Mont Blanc. She previously held positions at HEC Lausanne and City University of Hong Kong. Her research focuses on environmental and energy economics, with a recent emphasis on the energy transition.

Since 2018, she has been a scientific advisor at France Stratégie, contributing to studies on the value of climate action (Quinet commission), abatement costs (Criqui commission), and the economic impact of climate policies (Pisani-Ferry-Mahfouz commission).

She is also a member of the expert committee on socio-economic analysis, which sets the discount rate for public investment evaluation, the board of the Institute of Mathematics for Planet Earth, and the advisory council of the TSE Center for Climate and Energy. Additionally, she directs the European Master in Business and Management across four countries (France, Italy, Germany, and Spain).

Aude Pommeret is an associate editor of the European Economic Review and co-editor of Resource and Energy Economics.
