

Anna Creti holds a PhD from the Toulouse School of Economics and a post-doc from the London School of Economics. She has previously worked at the Toulouse School of Economics, Bocconi University, the University of Nanterre and has visited the University of California Santa Barbara and Berkeley. She has also studied in depth competition and utility regulation in Europe, and the link between energy, climate and environmental regulation. She is now full professor at Université Paris-Dauphine-PSL, Director of the Climate Economics Chair (Un. Dauphine) and Associate Director of the Economics of Gas Chair (U Dauphine, Toulouse School of Economics, IFPEN, Ecole des Mines)