

Marc Ferracci is a French politician who serves as Minister for Industry and Energy in the government of Prime Minister François Bayrou since 23 December 2024. A member of Renaissance, he previously briefly served as Minister Delegate for Industry in the government of Michel Barnier from 21 September 2024.

Marc Ferracci was elected the deputy to the National Assembly for the sixth constituency for French residents overseas in 2022, which encompasses Switzerland and Liechtenstein. He won reelection in 2024. Previously, he had been Emmanuel Macron's economy adviser in Macron's 2017 presidential campaign; he was named a special adviser to Labour Minister Muriel Pénicaud following the election. In 2020, he became an adviser to Prime Minister Jean Castex.

An economist by occupation, Ferracci graduated from HEC Paris and Sciences Po. He made academic contributions as a professor at Panthéon-Assas University specialising in economics and labour policy, including his involvement in the reform of employment systems in France. His expertise spans various fields earning him recognition as a nominee for the Best Young French Economist Award in 2016.